

Trying Everything to Save Lives

Honoring their duties, the military medics joined the epidemic prevention, control and treatment of patients in various designated hospitals across the Hubei province. By adopting a civil-military cooperation approach with proper preventive measures and targeted treatment, they tried their best to receive and cure as many patients as possible while striving to “win the battle with zero infection”.

A military medic disinfects an ambulance that transfers patients.

Military medics receive a patient.

感染七科一病区

Military medics send the patients into a ward.

Military medics check the medical records of patients.

Military medics discuss the treatment plan for severe cases.

The nursing team leader in the intensive care unit explains the safety notes to her teammates.

Military medics adjust the oxygen intake flow for a patient.

Military medics provide nursing care for patients.

A military medic responds to a patient's call in the process of treatment.

A patient in the intensive care unit looks up gratefully at a military medic, the “guardian of life” in his eyes.

A military medic nurses a patient in the intensive care unit.

With great patience, a military medic comforts a patient in the intensive care unit.

A military medic takes care of a healthy new-born, whose mother is an infected patient.